4. Two unidentified bound volumes containing 272 pages of typewritten material (carbon copies). There is no obvious connection between these volumes and Fred L. Wenner. They are concerned primarily with the murder case of United States vs. Sam Robinson and 29 others. Robinson and his men were accused of the murder of four men named Gross, Hubbard, Wilcox, and Eaton at Wild Horse Lake, No Man's Land, now Texas County, Oklahoma, on July 25, 1888. Four were convicted and sentenced to be hung, but the Supreme Court overturned the ruling and the case was stricken from the docket in 1895. (The story of the massacre, its background, and its after-effects is told well in Carl Coke Rister, No Man's Land, pp. 129-139.) (The event is sometimes known as the Haystacks Murders.) These two volumes contain primarily examinations of witnesses, though there are also some letters from Attorney-General Richard Olney to Robert E. Hannay, U.S. Attorney at Paris, Texas, concerning the case, and a few other times, a few of which even seem to be concerned with another case (involving George Gillen).
